Abstract

Curtis Jr (2018) presents a motivation and qualitative sample structure of higher education design. Curtis Jr (2018) describes the technical administrative processes of higher education completion using qualitative information concerning the methods of transfer, including transfer to the Education Foundation, IGRI, and JECJEF University.

Keywords: applied economics education, education entrepreneurship, religious studies

1. Introduction

Wikipedia (2013) suggests "... transfer is the anticipated" movement a student considers "between education providers and the related institutional processes supporting ... post-secondary learners who move ... completed coursework or training ... applicable to a degree." Transfers "between different education providers" and institutions "varied". Furthermore, "... Student mobility spans institutions and regions, differing policies and practices often extending ... degree completion by ... one semester. (General Accounting Office, National Center of Education Statistics, 2005)" "... By mid-2010, 2.2 million students ... experienced" higher education at "4,000 higher education institutions in 33 participating countries (European commission and European Union Lifelong Learning, 2007-2013)."

Effective description and completion of transferring to a graduate program is vital to the success of strong graduation candidates, i.e., Doctorate of Philosophy candidates, seeking regional and international association, and publications with academia, government and private sector researchers, leading research awards and successful higher education administration and faculty employment. This paper is a revision of The Economizing of Transcript Transcription Services for Graduate Programs with Competitive Degree Candidates, Education Foundation Preliminary Papers Series, written by James E Curtis, Jr in 2003, edited by James E Curtis, Jr. in 2013-2017. The paper is organized into the following, i. Certificates & Degrees, ii. Certificates, Degrees, & Requirements, iii. Course Catalog, Economics, iv. Course Catalog, General Studies, v. Course Catalog, Religious Studies, vi. transfer, vii. transfer of coursework completed and candidacy for degree graduation, and viii. references.

... transfer is the anticipated, movement a student considers, “between education providers and the related institutional processes supporting ... post-secondary learners who move ... completed coursework or training ... applicable to a degree.” Transfers “between different education providers” and institutions “varied”. “The application, applicability and articulation of prior course credits from one college or university to another culminates in a student’s transfer and enrollment in a program of study” and “aspiring to complete a college credential. The assessment of prior learning and the articulation of credit offered to a prospective student varies based upon institutional practices and the enforcement of government policies” or “negotiated rules”. “... Student mobility spans institutions and regions, differing policies and practices often extending ... degree completion by ... one semester (General Accounting Office and the National Center of Education Statistics, 2005).” ...
